Founded in 1971, the Center for Women’s Studies at Wichita State University is one of the longest-standing, degree-granting, autonomous women’s studies departments in the country.

As a department in the Fairmount College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, the Center for Women’s Studies offers a major and minor in women’s studies. Students receive academic training and professional skills with the goal of improving the lives of women as well as racial, gender, sexual and other minorities in domestic and professional arenas. Issues of gender, race/ethnicity, class and sexuality are central in classroom analyses of local, transnational and global trajectories and students have appropriate out-of-class avenues to apply their learning.

Women’s studies is interdisciplinary in approach so students benefit from departmental specialists in American and Global Cultural Studies as well as History, Feminist, Literary and Biblical Studies. The major reflects a thematic rather than disciplinary focus through four core areas — Global and International Studies; Diverse Explorations of Popular Culture, Literary and Media Representations; Interdisciplinary Studies of Social Diversity and Inequalities; Religion and Diversity of Thought. The areas provide new perspectives that enable students to think outside the box and have critical understanding of women, other minorities as well as men and the society in various social and political contexts. Students may elect to double-major in women’s studies and other fields in the liberal arts and sciences, or other colleges. In addition, you may select appropriate cross-listed courses from such fields as philosophy, sociology, social work, history, English, anthropology, religion, ethnic studies, political science, criminal justice, psychology and communication to complete the major.

The major prepares students for careers in a variety of fields. If you are considering this major, a women’s studies faculty member understanding your academic program, career goals and selection of core area will advise you.

If you major in women’s studies, you’ll enhance your preparation to work in areas such as social work, education, international relations, media, politics, law, psychology, criminal justice and others that concentrate on media literacy, diplomatic or foreign service, international trade, visual design or social services. A women’s studies major is also good preparation for graduate work not only in women’s studies, but in cultural studies, American and liberal studies, and other disciplines and interdisciplinary fields.

Our graduates include lawyers, writers, Peace Corps volunteers, small business owners, social workers, human resources specialties, sales managers and professors.

Admission
When you choose to study women’s studies, you will be admitted to the Fairmount College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. You will be assigned a faculty advisor in the women’s studies department who will help you develop your program of study and who will outline specific requirements.

If you are still deciding on a major when you start at Wichita State, the Liberal Arts and Sciences Advising Center will help you explore career and major options.

Related Opportunities
As a women’s studies major or minor, a BGS with a women’s studies concentration, a liberal studies graduate student, or a student involved in women’s studies and global learning, you have the opportunity to apply for a variety of scholarships ranging in amounts from $180-$1,500. General Plaza of Heroines Scholarships are available up to $500; also available are the Forum for Executive Women (FEW) scholarship, part-time graduate and undergraduate student assistantships, and scholarships that provide students with opportunities to participate in conferences.

As a women’s studies major, you may also be employed—through the university’s Career Development Center—in a co-op position related to women’s studies and earn credit hours for the experience.

If eligible, you may be selected for university academic honor societies such as Phi Kappa Phi and Mortar Board.
